Paradoxically the most damaged buildings have been the city's most modern constructions which were built by the French after an earthquake in 1954 killed 1,600 people. They were intended to be earthquake-proof.

There is still much confusion and bewilderment about what has happened and no coherent assessment of the number of people who have died.

The balcony deathtrap that defeated 'Pravda'

Twenty-one years ago a fibre factory in Serpukhov, not far from Moscow, put up a fine block of flats for its workers. No 1 Krukov Street was like any other Soviet apartment block.

Of course there were the usual problems with things that did not work or instantly broks. But this block had one special peculiarity; none of the bal-conies had any railings. What was more bizarre, they sloped away from the building-ore step out on to the balcony and

The block became something of a landmark in Serpukhov, But its inhabitants were not happy.

They had to black up the doorways to the halcomes to stop children going out on to the deathtraps. They erected saudhag walls and they complained to the factory management.

An official reassured them their claims would be considered. "We'll look into it", he said. And so be did—for years. The inhabitants moved house, the factor: management changed, and when the newcomers in turn went along to complain, they were told to wait, railings would soon be procured and fitted.

Engineering workers to get 'marginally' improved single-figure wage offer

By Paul Routledge Labour Editor

Engineering employers will make a marginal improvement in their 6.2 per cent pay offer to union leaders of two million workers in the industry, with hopes of a rapid settlement.

A single-figure deal for that sector, comprising the largest group of workers covered by collective bargaining between the Engineering Employers' Federation and the Confederation of Shipbuilding and Engineering Unions would be a substantial fillip for Mrs Margaret Thatcher in her talks on pay and the economy with the TUC General Council to-

But for that reason if for no other is is expected that the unions will insist on one further round of negotiations before agreeing on new wages rates to operate in Britain's key manuindustries from facturing November 1.

Engineering employers' nego-trators are likely to increase their offer to about 7 per cent in today's talks, leaving a further I per cent or so in reserve for a final round of discussions that would take the settlement to about 8 per cent. Whatever political considera-tions are brought to bear, the engineering employers are determined that this year's basic rate increases will be kept in single figures. The employers' first offer, rejected by the utions, would lift the craftsmen's minimum rime rate from 573 a week to 577.50, and the rate for unskilled workers would go up from 552.50 to 555.50. Most workers in en-gineering earn more, and in some cases much more, than these nationally determined basic rates through bargaining at plant level.

unions in the economy will be at the beart of the Downing Street talks between the Prime linister, senior members of her Cabinet and the TUC General Coencil In a propaganda shot across the Government's bows, Mr David Easnett, chairman of the argued yesterday that trade unionists were not "pricing themselves out of jobs". "The truth is that pay cuts will not solve Britain's unem ployment problems", he said.

"In fact, they may make it worse. The last thing we should be doing is cutting people's purchasing power at the very moment when industry is already hit by a disastrous slump in orders."

Mr Basnett, general secretary of the General and Municipa Workers Union, told his union's regional council in Newcastle upon Tyne that the TUC delegation would put a five-point programme to the Cubinet. The unions would demand an immediate cut in interest rates and "action to take the squeeze off industry".

They also sought a commitment to expand the economy and long-term measures to regenerate British industry us revenue from North Sea Oil.

Fresh legislation to curb the power of trade unions is unlikely during the forthcoming session of Parliament if Mr James Prior, Secretary of State for Employment, gets his way.
His ministry's Green Paper on trade unions and their imon trade unions and their immunitles under the law, now being drawn up, will be a wideranging examination of the various long-term options for regulating industrial relations rather than a plan for further immediate legislative changes.

Publication of the Govern-ment's discussion document will not take place until December, and there will then be lengthy consultation on the basic issues it raises about the role of conference last week, and there is therefore no cause for base. At the earliest, a White Paper could be prepared for next autumn, with legislation coming in the 1981-82 session.

That moderate option, designed to give the recently implemented Employment Act time to "bed down", commands the support of many employers in industries where further curtailments of union power would create the sharpest reaction, and among Tory back-benchers who favour Mr Priot's

Thatcher's Cabinet, including the Prime Minister herself, would be remoted to go for fresh curbs on secondary indusrrial action and possible restrictions on primary strike action if there was a repetition of something like the 13-week steel strike early this year.

The Confederation of British The Confederation of British Industry has proposed that the Green Paper should range as widely as possible over—the fundamental issues of employment law. Industrialists want the discussion document to look at legally enforceable collective agreements—and compulsory strike ballots, with the introduction of a test of "reasonable behaviour" if unions are to stay within the law.

That leisurely timetable, it is argued by Mr Prior's supporters, was approved in principle by the Conservative Party specific changes that will satisfactore law week and there fy either the right wing of Mr Prior's party or the hard-line industrialists who want to see the Government doing more, and doing it more quickly.

Indeed, if some of Mr Prior's aides win the argument now going on in the Department of Employment, the document will also chart an alternative way forward which will almost cer-tainly lead to intensified criticism of the minister. That formula, which has previously been aired by the confederation, would stand the present law on urgently needed for the North Sea oilfields. From the beginning the pro-posals provoked sharp contro-versy, accusations of excessive versy, accusations of excessive secrecy, and strong opposition from the Countryside Commission and the National Trust for Scotland But a public inquiry was held in September of that same year, and early in January, 1975, approval was announced for three sites, at Portavadia, Hunterston on the Ayrshize coast, and Campbelltown, sites to the Mull of Kintyre. All three sites would be taken All three sites would be taken into public ownership, and the Government was prepared to make £40m available in grants

Many people were surprised at the haste. The Glasgow Herald commented: "To the visitor the whole process is both spectacular and unnerving. The change is so quick and irrevocable". The consortium admitted that it had no orders, but the Government insisted that the site was "desperately needed".

be foreign and Commonwealth observers of the election, as in Rhodesia, is still on the table, but some of the governments involved are rightly asking for explanations before they find themselves rubber stamping a prearranged outcome.

The invasion is an ironic commentary on Dr. Obote's record, for it was he-who, by making himself virtually a dictator, gave Mr Amin his opportunity to take over by force and to become himself a dictator. Dr Obote now professes to be a democrar. Certainly he cannot easily return to power without the legitimation which an election could give him. But it is anybody's guess what sort of a regime he would instifute once he had the power. He is President Nyerere's choice, and President Nyerere is influenced by socialist beliefs and a general, but not indiscriminate preference for the communist block against the West. Dr Obote appeared broadly to share these views before his exiler Mean-while, however, Dr Nyerere's ideas, particularly on African farm cooperatives, have pro-gressed. Perhaps Mr. Obote's have too, but it is difficult to be ∘farmgjire. -

It could certainly be argued that Uganda needs a strong man to end its anarchy, and to set about restoring the potentially rich economy which it inherited at independence just eighteen years ago last Saturday, But it would be dangerous if people began, in despair, to say that anything would be better than the regime which Uganda has now.' As the Law Commission recognized there might still have to be a judicial figure to adjudicate on those additional factors.

The other options listed in the discussion document all involve the application of criteria different from those laid down in the present law, but they too might be applied unjustly. That is not necessarily the fault of the judges or registrars. In most cases there is, quite simply, not enough to go around, and one party will be bound to feel aggrieved. That fundamental fact for apportioning finances are reformed.

The Law Commission is right to point out that, at a deeper level; this debate is really part of the wider reassessment of the marriage relationship. Is it still expected to last for life and therefore to require the duties and obligations which flow from to endure even when the parries are no longer together? Now that getting divorced is no longer based on proof of fault how far should the financial consequences of divorce still be affected by conduct?

At the heart of the debate is the changing position of women in society, and especially their access to employment and equal pay. The application of the present law is still strongly influenced by the different roles normally played by the husband and wife in marriage. Unless men and women achieve genuine equality economic status - and even this would not solve the difficulties posed by having and caring for children-it will remain ex-tremely difficult to deal with the financial consequences of divorce without some injustice to one side or the other.

Prom Mr P. E. Waine Sir, The President of the Law Society is reported to have said at his society's annual conference that there are too many solicitors, And yet we their clients have to wait an inordinate amount of time for a solicitor to complete even the supplest of transactions.
Either, therefore, solicitors are remarkably bad at managing their time or we need more splicitors. I have more than an injustive feeling which one of the two is the right answer. If I conducted my husiness transactions in the same ponderous and inefficient way. I.

Yours faithfully. PETER E. WAINE. Oaktree Cottage, 108 Handside Lane, Welwyn Garden City, Hertfordshire. October 10.

From Mr R. N. Saunders and Mr P. M. Knott

Sir, As younger members of the profession we feel that younger solicitors, and particularly students, will be concerned and depressed by the Claim of the President of The Law Society (October 10) that too many young people are becoming oncaors. In the light of the finding of the Royal Commission on Legal Services that there was a substantial unmet need for legal assistance, Mr Clarke's claim may be doubted. The real question is as to the quality of service, and over this The Law Society has considerable comrol. Questioning the integrity of younger solicitors needs justification; as for their competence, this depends on the effectiveness of supervision by their principals as well as their own ability. feature of the speech is the possi-bility that on these grounds The Law Society may seek to justify still further tightening of entrance requirements which in fact may not be related to the student's practical ability as a lawyer. Final Examinastudents, in particular, may fear (doubtless quite wrongly) that these policy considerations may affect their Examinations.

This would not only be unfair to students but also an inappropriate way of raising standards; it would be far more effective to make solicitors' articles, and possibly even the first year of practice after qualifying a true probationary period subject to Law Society inspection. It is only at this later stage that a student's apritude becomes ascertainable.

It is quite right that aspiring solicitors should be warned as early as possible of the difficult path the lies whead, but such warnings should not be so phrased as to cause students to doubt The Law Society's fairness and unjustifiably to threaten the predic's confidence Yours faithfully.

Gulf war causes

From Mr Arthur Super Sir, I have been reading carefully both the reports and the comments on the Gulf war, both in The Times and other "quality" newspapers. I am sure that the reports are as accurate as can be. I am less sure about the comments, especially when they are made by "experts" on the Middle East or quote mformed sources in Whitehall "

There is no need to remind The Times of the argument that has long been put forward by British Governthat the main cause of the troubles m the Middle East, and resulting there from the "tough" attitude of the Arab oil-producing states on oil prices, has been the Israel/Arab states conflict, and that the main factor in that has been Israeli intransigence and its refusal to talk to the Palestine Laberation Organiza

Does not what is now going on in the Gulf prove the hypotrisy; or at least the unreality, of this claim? Arab disunity is plain for all the world to see, and its endemic nature is plain for all who are willing to look. Even the most pro Arab commentator has not been foolish enough to blame Israel for the Gulf war or for the perennial stringgle in Iraq between Iraqis and Kurds, or the threat to the whole world if the Straits of Hormus are closed. Perhaps, Sir, you will admit, and urge Lord Currington to admit, that the problem of the Palestinian refugees is irrelevant to the present struggle between Iraq and Iran, and that the best hope for solving that problem is for the great powers to press the Arab states surrounding Israel to end the state of war and enter on direct pegotiations, thus following Egyot's example.
Yours faithfully.

Supply and demand Morality of avoiding tax avoidance

From Mr R. W. Mass

Sir, I was somewhat surprised to see you quote Sir Geoffrey Howe (October 9) as saying that the Vester decision had stripped from the Revenue the instrument it had relied upon to implement the law. Surely it did nothing of the sort. It merely decided that the law enacted by Parliament in 1936 was not the law that the Revenue today would have liked Parliament to have enacted. Since 1936 they have not been implementing the law. They have been implementing what they would have liked the law to have been. Sir Geoffrey as a lawyer himself must know this.

I have yet to see in the recen adverse press comment on Vestey case any reference to what the House of Lords actually decided, namely that Parliament in 1936 did not give the Inland Revenue a discretionary power to tax whoever they want on any amount they want. This does not seem to me to be a surprising decision, nor to warrant the adverse comments to which it has given rise. In 1936 fairness was seen as a basic axiom of our tax system and although modern day Chancellors tend to place far less emphasis on this concept it would have been more surprising if the House of Lords had held that the Revenue were given in 1936 the very wide discretionary powers to which they laid claim.

It is to be hoped that Sir Geoffrey will not be stampeded by ill-informed public opinion into giving the Revenue the draconic powers which they bave laid claim in the Vestey case. There is a clear need for a change in the law. It is however a need for a well thought out change designed to prevent specific identifiable avoidance opportunities. One assumes that any change would affect income arising after the date of the change and not merely income on assets transferred after that date. If so there is no obvious pressing need to rush into amending legislation to stop an out-flow of capital from the country.

Instead the Chancellor should issue a green paper on the reform of section 478 of the Taxes Act so that the change that is needed can be made after the fullest possible public discussion to ensure that it is the correct change. For example, should a change be designed to prevent United Kingdom residents transferring property oversees for the benefit of other UK residents; should it extend to transfers of non-UK assets by non-UK residents who want to include as beneficiaries relatives in the UK; if it is to extend to transfers by nonresidents why should it be limited to transfers into settlements and not also cover the situation where the non-resident retains his own assets and later gifts the assets of the income derived therefrom to a UK resident either on death or by wa; of a lifetime gift?

As the law stands it is unfair. It should not however be amended ness by another, as will arise if the legislation is simply amended to restore to the Revenue the powers that they had appropriated to selves by placing a strained inter-pretation on 1936 legislation intended solely to counteract a specific device. Yours faithfully,

R. W. MAAS. Robert Mass and Company, 40-42 Oxford Street, W1.

From Mr Mark Radcliffe Sir, Is it right, in anybody's mind, that a person should be assessed to tax on money which he has not received?

That, surely, was the point in issue before the House of Lords in the Vestey case.

There may he a need for reform of the law to render taxable as income that capital which was distributed from the trust but one hopes that even the Inland Revenue will not wish to take that which we have not got and might

In the meantime, why is it necessary to vilify by inquendo, those who have conducted their affairs with proper regard for the law. Yours faithfully, MARK RADCLIFFE. 33 Donne Place, SW3.

From Mr. P. F. Smith Sir, Regarding the remarks of Fro-fessor Hall (October 19), it is of resor half (October 10). It is of number of specific anti-avoidance statutory provisions in various scattered parts of tax legislation, and to counter his point I cite two of them with comments from leading authorities.

The first is the Income and Corporation Taxes Act 1970 section 488(1): "This section is enacted to prevent avoidance of tax by persons concerned with land..." Of this, a leading textbook (Whiteman and Wheateroff on Income Tax) states that "whether that statement has any effect as a matter of law is extremely doubtful" (para 4—59). The second and perhaps more sinister provision is that in the Capital Transfer Tax provisions of the Finance Act 1975, Under section 20(4), it is provided that: "A disposition is not a transfer of value if it is shown that it was not it, is shown that it was not intended . . . to confer any gratui-tous benefit on any person . . . As to this, arguably, a perusal of the textbooks -leads to the despairing conclusion that the possible opera-tion of this provision will be bedevilled with difficulty. With respect, therefore, the above thoughts appear to cast doubt on the desirability or effectiveness of the learned correspondent's suggested foreign importations. Yours faithfully. P. F. SMITH.

From Mr Philip Frere

Sir, Much publicity is being given to the Vestey case as though there were something unique about it, whereas in fact it is far from being so. Tax avoidance only really started after World War One, when all that was necessary was to form a: company.

That: first loophole was stopped after a few years by legislation which decreed that the company must be a pre 1914 registration, which at once gave a pre-emptive value to any bankrupt company of that earlier epoch (such companies used to be advertised in The Times and the going rate was about £200). And so it went on, loophole after loophole being discovered and stopped as the years went by.

As late as 1936 a few lines on a sheet of note paper, called an "accumulator" was sufficient to avoid all surrax. The late Lord Uthwatt, then junior counsel to the Treasury advised me in this not unremunerarive field of law from 1930 to 1950 when I retired. But "Tax Avoidance" found unpleasing and one day said "In these Chambers the expression we prefer is "Failure to Attract".

Entrances to Oxbridge From Mr R. W. H. Price

Sir, Diana Geddes (October 8) is right about the difficulties which e maintained schools face over Oxhridge entry.

I have become increasingly frustrated by the Oxhridge entry system since leaving an independent school with a good "Oxhridge record? and coming to teach in this 11-18 comprehensive school,

I can best illustrate the problems which we face by describing the experience of one of my own sixth form students. Last November he took the Oxford entrance examina-tion in his fourth term in the sixth form. He was not offered a place. This summer he took his lovels. He got grade A in all three subjects—physics; chemistry and biology—and was awarded a distinction in the "5" level biology

Confident that he now had the necessary "A" level qualifications and undeterred by his earlier failure, he decided to apply again to Oxford. Today, the college to which be applied has written saving than he must take the Oxford entrance exam again. We are quite unable in this comprehensive school to offer special timetabled teaching for Oxbridge candidates. Instead, in spite of staffing cuts, and with heavy teaching loads we struggle to fit in the odd totorial in a lunch hour or after school when other commitments allow it. We know that (whatever the Oxbridge colleges may say to the contrary) our candidates will be at a great disadvantage beside those who've had the intensive coaching which so obviously brings success to the schools (independent) that can offer it.

The vast majority of the children in this country now go to compre-hensive schools. Isn't it time that the Oxbridge Colleges made a effort to find our what goes on in such schools. They'd then be in a better position to set about incaung and attracting the able pupils who are at present eluding them.

The present entrance exam system just will not do. It is too heavily loaded against the comprehensive Yours faithfully,

R. W. H. PRICE Head of Biology, The Netherhall School, Queen Edith's Way. Cambridge.

From Dr K. B. Prettg Sir, I was extremely interested to see your article on the proposals of Oxford University's admissions policy. New Hall, which has just celebrated its twenty-fifth anniver sary, has always admitted its undergraduates on the basis of their performance in a single examination paper. - -

Moreover it has never offered cutrance scholarships, in the belief that such scholarships reward the school more than the candidate and in particular, reward those schools provision for Oxbridge candidates. For the last 25 years we have been delighted with the result of this very simple admissions procedure. Yours faithfully, KATE PREITY, Admissions Tutor,

Suffolk nuclear site

From Mr J. I. Dearnley Sir. Those who know and love the Suffolk coast can only respond with amazement at the Central Electricity Generating Board's proposal to site there two very large reactors of the pressurized water type. When added to the existing small Magnov station, this will, as your report of October .2 states, constitute the nearest to the "nuclear park." concept yet to be planned here. Additionally there is a possibility, at this casternmost coastal site, of exporting surplus power to the Low Countries, via a very large "con-verter" station. Local electricity demand being negligible, it also appears likely that the existing power line straddling four counties will have to be duplicated. It seems that the worst predicos of the environmental and anti-nuclear groups are realized. Perhaps more than anywhere else, Suffolk preserves that seemliness of a modest, balanced and agrarian life-style; the recognition of its coast-'heritage coast" line as a "area" of norstanding natural beauty" is some indication of this. The two local organizations you mention (which are totally complementary) are facing a hard struggle, with the prospect of a public inquiry of uncertain terms of reference and with premature and incomplete - technical - assessments. Given the state of the economy and foreseeable electricity demand, it seems gravely unwise to rush pre-cipitately into this project; as the recipients of the eight other PWR stations will not conquatulate the-Government on its timetable if the technical experiment conducted at Sizewell proves to be unsound. Yours faithfully,

Homes fit for Leonardo

From Mrs Elizabeth Irwin

From Mrs Elizabeth Irwin
Sir. The article (October 7) entitled.
"The high cost of keeping our heritage" by Geraldine Norman ended with the sentence—"Do we want Leonardo or do we want Holkham?"
The answer should be shouted from the roof tops: we want Holkham. The Leonardo will centing to exist. Whereas Holkham, without financial support will disappear as financial support, will disappear as have so many great country bouses. What will it avail us if we have a mass of art and only museums and two-ups and two-downs to put it in? Yours fairbfully ELIZABETH IRWIN. 21 Hillbury Road, SW17.

Religion and crime

Sir, I was the author of the article in The Church Now (Gill & Mas-millan, 55.95) which your Religious Correspondent, Clifford Longley, used as the basis of his article. The dilemma over Roman Catholic delinquents (October 3).

From the Reverend Terence E.

definition of the two letters you published today (October 9) from Sir John and Lady Lawrence and Mr John Farrell.

The writers of rhese letters presume that drug addicts, rent boys, strippers. compulsive samplers strippers, compulsive gamblers, alcoholics, convicted prisoners and the like find a spiritual home in the Roman Carbolic Church—that the Church is a rejugium pecceturum. Would that that were so!

Would that that were so !

I do not know how much day-mday knowledge your correspondents have of the groups of which they write, but my record in attempting to help them is fairly well known.

My assertion is fairly well known.

I have called for professional research to discover whether I am right) that Roman Catholic teaching contributes to the creation of these groups. Father Dinerty, CSS3 (October 7), in asserting that the reasons are religious (italics his) seems to agree with me. My thesis is that the Roman Catbolic Church has some responsibility for the over representation of its, members among these groups and does nothing about it. These groups, far from spiritual home in the Roman Catholic Church, hate and revile it. In the words of many of the Offertory Prayers of the Roman Rite, please do not cover sin with fair phrases. Yours faithfully.

TERENCE F. TANNER, Horseshoe Cottage, Exton. Leominster. Herefordshurs.

October 8. From the Leverand Giles Hunt Sir, It is tempting for me, as an Anglican, to feel smug that Reman Carbolica seem to have a process sity for crime (just as, some years back, I could feel smug when told that Calvinists, in Scotland, seemed to have a propensity for alcohol-But before we leap to too many conclusions, based on whatever par-ticular view of religion we happen to hold, would it not be better to try to cross-check, from statistics in other countries, whether those concerned became criminals because they were Roman Catholics, or because they shared some other mutual characteristic? For example: an exceptionally high pro-portion of English Roman Catholics are of Irish extraction, and Celts on the whole lack respect for Angle-Sexon laws and customs. There are other possible explanations, too : but I cite this example because one can see at once that it would not show in in any official statistics, since only very few. Roman Catholics with Jrish blood-are actually Irish citizens.

Wagnerian ring From Mr Edward Porton

Sir. Bernard Levin has either gone mad or bad. There is, if you are prepared to indulge him, no ressen why he should not pen a merckich tribute to an observe American colonel (October 7). But to use the death of a personal friend as a launchine pad to attack the hel-goblins of the left is crass, and it steers him into the sert of intellectual dishunesty and demagogy he claims to deplore.

The words may have a fine ring to them, but just who are three "millions who are taught that the first duty of a citizen in a free country is to hate it, and the second is to work towards the destruction of its freedom "? This is not decent rhetoric. It is reading, Until new I had thought Tony Bean's the most fanatical public voice in Britzin; now I'm not so sure. Still, I suppose Mr Levin can take comfort in the certainty that his great hern Wagner would applaud such irradicuality. Yours sincerely. EDWARD MORTON,

West Indies papers

From Dr Howard Temperley Sir. As someone Currently working in the field of British-West Indian relations I can see no reason way these papers should not be cold to the University of the West Indies. On the other hand, I do unce that a photographic copy be kept in a suitable repository in this country. As it happens very few scholars have actually been aware of the emistence of these papers. It would be an agreeable outcome if, as a result of this transaction, they hecame more readily accessible scholars ceth here and in the West Indies.

be intended to help in alleviateing mass hunger and each will be warmly supported by Oxfan. Dr Crisp is resident cauliflower breeder at the National Vegetable Research Station near Warwick. He is worried by reports that Italian smallholders are turning to modern, high-yielding varieties of cauliflower. He fears that nobody is bothering to grow the many traditional varieties which are not found elsewhere. Such regional varieties used to be found in Britain, and Cornwall was rich in cauliflowers until the Government sponsored a change Government sponsored a change to a few new varieties about 50 years ago. The old ones, now extinct, produced a scruffy carliftener but were left untouched by inaspor, a fungus disease that breeders would now dearly love to eradicate.

Labour leadership From The Times of Thursday, Oct.

Margate, Oct 12.—Mr Herbert Morrison and Mr Hugh Gairskell, the two strongest candidates for the succession to the Labour Party leadership, both affirmed their Socialist falth to the annual conference of the party here today. Their declarations were both in answer to speakers of the left who, like Mr Bevan, have implied that anybody who uses not believe in unlimited nationalization is not a true Socialist. But many delegates regarded them as in the nature regarded them as in the nature of applications for the position of narty leader. Of the two there is no question that Mr Gaitskell was more successful today. He has not in the past shown anything like the ability of Mr Bevan-or of Mr Morrison at his best—to arouse the enthusiasm of a Labour audience but be has—what M Bevan so conspicuously lacks—a deep respect for the forces which presented his case with great skill today . . . The applause which followed this peroration . . must have done something to persuade the party that Mr Gaitskell is not only a rise accordance by the second control of the party that Mr Gaitskell is not only a rise accordance by the second control of the secon only a wise economist but also a leader able to arouse a popular

Dr Crisp is confident that if the old varieties existed their resistance to ringspot could be bred into the high-yielding types of the 1980s. "I have never succeeded in getting any of the old Cornish material", Dr Crisp said. He and Dr Astley will contri-bute to a gene bank which is to be established at the research bute to a gene hank which is to be established at the research station. Its purpose is to reproduce old varieties of seed which have fallen out of favour, but which may have characteristics that will be valuable to breeders in the future.

Plants of the old varieties will be grown at the station each year in conditions designed to ensure against dilution of the ancient lines through cross-pollination. Dr Astley already presides over rows of cautiflowers grown in a glasshouse behind fine mesh. "As breeders breed purer and "As breeders breed purer and purer lines you are narrowing the genetic base", Dr Astley explained. "You have to act before that base narrows to a point." Professor Lindsay Innes, deputy director of the station, said: "The signs are all there. We like to think that we have stepped in at a very timely moment." a very timely moment."

There are more than 20 gene banks in the world, but the one at the station will be the only one devoted entirely to vegetables grown in a temperate climate. Most such banks concentrate on cereals, which account for a far greater world acreage than vegetables. The rapid soread in developing countries of a few high-yielding varieties has raised fears about the impact on food supplies if such a variety suddenly became highly susceptible to a pest or disease.

Gene banks are meant to keep a stock ready if it becomes necessary to cross a popular modern variety with something else in order to breed some characteristic out of it. Vegetables have been realected in the actabilishment been neglected in the establishment of gene banks, and scientists are worried that valuable strains of sprout and onion are in danger of extinction.

Some of the varieties to be collected at the station will be those rejected in the latest EEC scheme for listing approved types of seed. Seed from the bank will be available only for scientists and pro-fessional plant breeders.

The £350,000 needed to start the gene bank has been raised by Oxfam. It includes £25,000 from the British Government and the same amount from the development directorate of the European Commission. In the present finan-cial climate neither is likely to put money on anything that is not safe and serious.

Radiation: Waste disposal doubts

By Pearce Wright

Doubts on the safety of storing glass blocks have been raised by from finities? fuel by burying it in glass blocks have been raised by research projects in France and Australia.

According to the journal Science, radiation from the waste could render the glass highly susceptible to chemical attack and to breakdown by moisture. Those effects have not been recognized in anchor research.

effects have not been recognized in earlier research.

The work by the French team, at the French Atomic Energy Commission and at the René Bernas Laboratory, is perhaps the more significant because it relates to waste from pressurized water reactors, and to the materials used in the special process developed by the commission for vitrification.

The stability of the glass is regarded as the most critical factor in the safety of that form of disposal. It is essential that the solidified waste is resistant for many hundreds of years to effects many hundreds of years to effects that could cause any radioactive leak into the ground water.

The French team identified a phenomenon it calls alpha-recoil aging. It describes one of the effects of radiation which occurs in the type of glass used for storage. It is regarded as the least understood of the changes caused by alpha, beta and gamma radiation from the waste. Previous experiments simulated over four or five years the radiation damage developing in periods of up to 1,000 years. According to the new research, those experiments fulled to reveal microscopic cracks, called particle tracks, which would develop as a result of the alpha-recoil.

result of the alpha-recoil. Samples of material showing that type of damage have been examined by the team, whereas the study at the Defence Research Centre at Salisbury, South Australia, is of a more theoretical native. The experimental work was not connected originally with nuclear waste disposal. Tests of the stab-ilty of various materials when bombarded by different types of particles were done for other

But Dr. E. H. Hirsch says that a new effect produced by isradiation, discovered in the experiments, has important implications for the disposal of high-level radioactive waste in blocks of materials which behave in a similar way.

His work shows how a wide range of materials containing alkali metals or alkali earths are subject readily to chemical attack and erosion by atmospheric moisture, in conditions that are much less severe than those which can be expected in a nuclear waste storage cave.

down process caus for no par-ticularly unusual circumstances. The deterioration is triggered by a certain pattern of irradiation from radioactive substances near the surface of the material, which could reasonably be expected in solidified waste blocks. the money supply. The details will be amounced in a few weeks, but it seems increasingly weeks, but it seems increasingly unlikely that the Government will adopt the radital system of monetary base control where the commercial banks are obliged to keep a specified proportion of their deposits at the Bank of England and interest rates are set by supply and demand.

More probably, changes will be aimed at achieving greater short-term control of monetary growth broadly within the present system, retaining some discretion for the authorities over the level at which inter-est rates are set

A viriety of schemes for tightening monetary control have been examined. One of the have been examined. Chief among these has been monetary. by a number of monetarist

The Bank of England is believed to view such a system of control puravourably, because it would have profound effects on the country's financial sys-tem and end the central bank's role as a kender of last resort to the other banks.

The Treasury is thought to be rather more open-minded on the issue. But it is being

One of the main arguments in favour of a completely automatic monetary base system is that it would take decisions about interest rates out of the hands of politicians, who are usually reluctant to see rates rise sharply. However, these arguments do not seem to have won many converts in Whitehall, and the weight of academic opinion appears to be against a radical

The view now gaining ground shout the methods of monetary control should be made when the new money supply targets are made known next month. The letter to Sir Keith from the Council of Engineering Institutions is described as only a preliminary response. It says that the profession's three elements—the Fellowship of Engineering, composed of its more senior members, the CEI itself and the individual institutions that comprise itare "engaged in refining their are "engaged in refining their ideas" to achieve a consensus. that against the background of the slump in demand, a further cut to 8 million tonnes cannot be ruled out. Work on the corporate plan is speeding up. Apart from the detailed studies of market prospects the reconstruction of the corporation's finances is being considered. Mr Albert Frost, the former ICI treasurer who is a part-time member of the BSC hoard, has done much of the work on Mr MacGregor in his sub-

ICI cutback may mean Delay over fibres plants will close

Cuts will take place at all seven of ICI's manmade fibre plants after the meeting of the group's board today to consider the future of the loss-making

Large-scale cunning into several thousands are expected, possibly involvplants. Already union officials describing the likely effect of the cutbacks as "horrific". They fear that there is still a body of opinion within the ICI board which favours the ending of man-made fibres production altogether.

The crisis in the division has been developing for several years. Total losses have exceeded $100m in the five years since 1974 when a profit was last recorded. Last year the deficit was £33m and there are gloomy forecasts that it could more than double this year.

Drastic surgery has already taken place. The United King-dom fibres workforce of 9,500 is only about half the size that it was a decade ago. As re-cently as last December the group announced that it was seeking $45m in economies, involving the loss of 2,800 jobs.

ICI stresses that no decision on the future of the division has been taken yet, although it spent many hours last week ex-plaining to union leaders the ficulties.

Today the board will consider the implications of a site-by-site report on the fibres divi-sion, as well as its implications for future production and jobs in the petrochemical division. A total shutdown of fibres manufacture appears unlikely but union leaders are worried about the consequences of a salvage operation. They are par ticularly anxious over the future of plants in areas of high unemployment, such as Kilroot in Northern Ireland and Pontypool in South Wales. The results of today's ICI meeting will be given to unions tomorrow. Already some such as ASTMS, the technical union, have taken the unusual step of calling emergency meetings for later in the week.

The union's response will be dictated by the scale of the cut-backs but they already believe that the announcement will cause havoc. They accept how-ever that the manmade fibres industry is in a parlous state and that some action is needed if the industry is to survive.

Mr Roger Lyons, an ASTMS national officer said yesterday: "The unions have cooperated in a massive rundown of United Kingdom fibres operations. We are now anxious to consure that as much as possible can be saved."

(or she) find any to compare with their foreign counterparts for suitability, style, or plain boring old reliability. British companies are very prone to blame their woes on the wicked world outside—on the activities of doctrinaire politicians and power-mad bureaucrats, on economic developments over which they have no control and even, occasionally and astonishingly, on their fickle and disloyal customers. No one doubts that conditions have been tough, particularly over recent months as the pound has appreciated agains the currencies of all our major trading competitors. But over the long term have British companies in fact brought many of their woes upon themselves— by failing to identify their customers' requirements or, even where they have identified them, by failing to satisfy them adequately? That is the question at issue in the debate, which begins on this debate, which begins on this page to-day, on the quality of British marketing and its contribution to our economic performance.

There is more to marketing than simply identifying what the customer wants and what the company can supply at an adequate profit. There is also the question of how the goods are to be sold and whether and how well they can be serviced thereafter. Is it true that the British tend to be bad at all

Granting that human beings have a greater capacity for re-membering the occasions on which they have been sold a pup (or possibly not sold any-thing at all) than the occasions on which they have been quite satisfied, it is still painfully easy to come up with examples down on their job—and very often for what appear to the outsider to be ludicrous rea-sons, nothing to do with the great unyielding realities of cost

There are the basic failures to at the point of sale, like the produce what the customer carpet manufacturers whose wants, like the British textile accounts proclaim them to be

We open a debate this week on the merits or otherwise of British marketing. The question put to three experts was "Are the British bad at : marketing and, if so, has this been an important cause of our poor industrial performance since the last war?" Their views, which we shall publish during the next three weeks are revealing. So is the story of a major marketing success by a British company which will be part of the series. This week Adrienne Gleeson introduces the debate with a consumer's view while Eric Morgan (right)', managing director of British-American Cosmetics, suggests that

But, though such experiences suggest that there are still plenty of British companies in which making comes first, sell-ing comes second and satisfying the customer comes a long way after that, is it fair to tar the whole of British industry with the same brush?

Some British industries have always been intensely aware of though they have tended to be those operating in the competi-tive domestic market (soap powder, convenience foods, life assurance) rather than the big world outside. Others have become acutely conscious of their customers, requirements over the past two decades (construction companies, furniture manufacturers, book publishers) or even more recently still (Brirish Rail).

Can they make and sell it at a price that people are prepared to pay? Because, if not we might as well resign surselves to continuing economic decline. tinuing economic decline.

Marketing—vital in the push for profit marketing—some Britons are: sterling with which to protect profits while paying for inpanies are generally more panies are generally more skilled in the marketplace than their European rivals and the best British firms are the equal of anything found in America.

There are reasons for this. including the fact that many marketing executives in Britain were educated in American companies. Even more important, however, is the effect of competition: consumer goods companies have not just noticed that the world is hard—they and so now there is nothing have always had to fight for left to recommend them.

Sickly consumer goods comply die off like Spartan babies exposed to the chill winds of professional

Heavy industrial companies in Britain have nor had the same experience and, for the most part, have not developed the same resilience. For many years they have lived cosily with few competitors, in a pro-tected environment, able to survive in spite of poor design, poor service and unprofessional attitudes.

Part of this protection has been the short-sighted comfort of a soft currency. This works in two ways: it allows you to sell in the British factory and/or it enables you to sell poor quality goods and give poor service be-cause your goods are so cheap that the overseas buyer cannot resist them.

Such protection is dangerous because these mechanisms do not go on working indefinitely. Eventually, the inefficiencies oduce such cost increases that the goods can no longer com-pete on price. Meanwhile, the products and services have become nasty as well as cheap

Years of talk about the virtues of devaluation have joined with domestic propa-ganda in favour of cheapness to produce a very dangerous attitude of mind in our country. Even if "cheap and nasty" may help to start to develop some export trade, it will not sustain it for long. With such a policy you are always vulnerable to a competitor than you are no who desperate than you are—or who is not so charitable towards his work people. Moreover, you teach everyone a sloppy, bargain basement attitude of mind in which it becomes acceptable

a life of low pressure, but it is not efficient; it soon leads to discontent and to all the pressures resulting from un-competitive economic performance. Social attitudes in America, Germany, Switzerland and Japan are different from ours. They live with competitive pressure and consider it respectable. Most of the time their currencies have been hard or very sumers are glad to pay higher prices if they get value for their money. Cheapest is not best; what matters is value.

There is an added bonus in such an attitude—it produces strength in your domestic market as well as ability to compete outside your horders. If you have value to offer to your local consumer, you do not need to worry about foreign competition, nor to clamour for that other short-sighted pro-keting concept needs to be widely embraced by British companies, particularly those in heavy industry. They are specially important to us because their potential exports represent a large total value; a few tractors or industrial machines or construction projects soon out-value millions of bottles of scotch or toilet water or cans of It is perhaps understandable that manufacturers of mighty machines are preoccupied with their product rather than with their customers; after all, such work demands great inven-tiveness, advanced skills of implementation and the deploy ment of great' quantities of money. But, however under-standable it may be, the comparatively simple and lowly tasks of marketing cannot be being taken into consideration and, if they are not, it is easy for them to take their custom elsewhere.

The marketing concept may be over-simplified as making profit by means of repeatedly satisfying consumers. Many clever people find profit boring, if not vulgar, and they have a in which it becomes acceptable tection—import restrictions. similar attitude towards to cut corners, to break You must, of course, communi-promises and to suffer shoody cate this value to your congods and services without complaint.

compare it against. Until 1971 that measuring rod was the dollar. The world's currencies, with very few exceptions, had with this problem. One is simply to let the market decide and say that if countries want to switch their reserves out of dollars into something else, whether it be gold, an international currency cocktail such as the special drawing right or some other national turrency, such as the mark they should conviction.

President Nixon's measures of August 1971, which ended dollar convertability, broke up that system, but left the world with a dollar dilemma. with a dollar dilemma.

Although the United States currency could never again have the same certainty, the world had nothing to replace it and in the early years of floating rates most countries with exchange rate targets set them in terms of the dollar. such as the mark, they should be allowed to do so. the allowed to do so.

The disadvantage of pursuing such a course is that the huge move out of dollars on the capital account which this implies has deeply disruptive effects on world trade. The problems which this can cause were vividly exposed during the recurrent dollar weakness of the late seventies. A new factor was the existence of huge surpluses the existence of huge surpluses on the current account of nil rich countries such as Saudi Arabia. In the first phase, these funds flowed into the United States and were held in dollars. But there is a difference between holding on to some-thing which has outlived its usefulness and actually choosing to invest new money in it; and it quickly became obvious that it made no sense for these countries to hold over 80 per contries to note over an per-cent of their reserves in devaluable dollars when only about a third of the world's trade is accounted for by the United States.

The monetary system thus faced a vicious circle. The fact that countries felt they had that countries felt they more dollars than they needed hy made the dollar vulnerable. The fact that the dollar was vulnerable made countries want to get out of dollars.

The second solution involves a formal system. The Inter-national Monetary Fund attempted to solve the problem by means of a substitution account. But this has so far come to nothing. At its heart, the proposal involved swapping dollars in countries' reserves for obligations issued by the IMF denominated in the fund's own currency, the special drawing right (SDR):

The scheme had a double attraction. It provided a way of easing countries out of their excessive reliance on dollars and into an asset whose promotion has long been one of the prime goals of the fund.

The substitution account has so far foundered on the problem of reaching any agreement about anything which bedevils the world money system. On top of that, the SDR itself has been upattractive to hold.

One reason is that as a political creation it is susceptible to political pressures. Developing countries have demanded that SDRs be created to provide aid, the so-called SDR "link" with aid. Another reason is that, in the past, the technical structure of the SDR has been unattractive. Its value has been determined hv using a basket of 16 currencies, but the interest rate is determined by looking at only five of those 16.

Since the currencies used in deciding the interest rate are the five strongest, the interest rate has been fairly low. Then, because the overall value of the SDR was determined by including other weaker currencies, holders of it ended up with the worst of all worlds; they got neither high income nor capital appreciation.

The disadvantages of the special drawing right are now being rectified. The number of currencies used to determine its value has been cut to the same five in the interest rate hasket. Its use is being expanded by the fund, making it clear that it will use SDRs in the markets if it needs to go

But the SDR is not yet a viable alternative to the dollar, though the recent changes make its prospects for playing a long-term role in the world monetary system better. There is even renewed interest in the idea of a substitution account. However, while all this has been going on, the reserve currency role of other monies, most dered into a new monetary systemotably the German mark, has tem which should prove a more grown substantially and seems set to expand more. In 1973 the important as the mark in offi-

1979 it was only six times as

Countries have shown a passtive interest in acquiring three currencies—the mark, the Swiss franc and the yen. The governments with these three curren-cies traditionally rejected the idea of allowing them to be-come reserve assets. In most they imposed strict restrictions to prevent it happening.

In spite of this, their role has grown and there has --- deen a change in attitud.

No one is positively welcoming a reserve role but the countries in question have come to terms with the inevitable. In often for the first time in many years, they have had to fond current account deficits. The German response, for example, has been to sell Deutsche mark denominated securities to Saudi Arabia, thus accepting that marks will form part of Saudi Reserves.

It is this change which has overcome the problem of an alternative to the dollar. And the existence of a number of reserve currencies means that countries no longer need to put all their eggs into one basket-

The scale on which this change has occurred is not fully shown by the table, since the industrial countries in the Group of Ten have been forced to absorb dollars into their reserves in recent years, thus masking the diversification carried out by other countries. There has also been the ending of sterling's major role as a reserve currency.

definitely arrived and with less pain than many thought inevitable. It will not, on its own, solve the problems of the world economy and it will not prevent there being some nasty worbles over the years ahead. But we have, almost by accident, hlunstable basis for development in the future.

The Gulf war-another misfortune for Brazil

San Paulo The Iran-Iran conflict has ended Brazil's hopes of holding its trade deficit below the $2,000m mark this year and provided yet another twist to the country's growing financial problems.

Throughout the year there has been persistent discussion among bankers about how soon Brazil would be thrust into the arms of the International Monetary Fund. It reached a successful during the account of the same of the year, and state and of the year. crescendo during the annual meeting of the fund in Washington earlier this month and now it does indeed seem likely that the country's leaders will have to turn to the IMF during 1981, particularly if the fund pull inflation below 50 per cent and bring visible trade into balance this year, but she has failed. Exports have increased by an impressive 35 per cent value and 15 per cent in volume, but the cost of imports, mainly oil, has risen even faster. The visible trade deficit has now reached $2,400m and it cannot be reduced much before the year's end.

it had been planned to run down the country's high oil stocks by about £1,000m-worth to ease the pressure, at least psychologically. But Brazil buys 70 per cent of its oil from the Guif and a run-down of stocks can simply no longer be risked.

This year, between $12,000m This year, between $12,000m and $14,000m had to be raised on world money markets. Next year Brazil will have to find to export earnings lower, and the debt still remains only a quarter of gross national pro-duct, lower than for many de-veloping countries. But the problem for bankers in head offices in Europe and North America, is the actual size of the sums concerned. The debt now stands around $55,000m and will end the year at a probable $58,000m.

These buge sums are an increasingly uncomfortable weight for the private banks to hold on their own. They would like an international agency to assume a much greater role and the IMF seems ready to do so. Brazil could draw more than

The North steps up its links with the 'Nordic Five'

A new initiative designed to lead to increased trade he-tween the northern half of the United Kingdom and Scandina-via and eventually, it is hoped, to new factories and new jobs in depressed areas is already showing signs of success.

The Nordic Business Forum for Northern Britain (NENB) was formed in March this year and already has 200 members. They come from industry, commerce, financial institutions and regional and local government; and a healthy number of companies from Norway, Sweden, Denmark, Finland and Iceland—the Nordic Five—are represented.

The idea originated from discussions between the Nordic consuls in the North-east and a small local committee. The area covered stretches north of a line drawn from the Mersey to the Humber, including Scotland, the Orkneys and Shetlands, Northern Ireland and -- Isle of Man. The population, ne 22,500,000 people, is, by chance, roughly the same as that of the five Nordic countries which totals just under 23 million.

The aim of the new organization is: "To encourage the greater flow of trade between Northern Britain and Scandinavia because many areas of the North already have strong trading links with the Nordic countries and direct sea and air services to support these links". There are also strong cultural and historical links between Northern Britain and Scandinavia. Mr Kenneth Robinson, spokesman for the NBNB and, for that matter, the Tyne and West County Council, points out: The aim is to seek out and maximize trading opportunities within the area as a counter-poise to the developments which are taking place within the heartland of continental tries that local authorities are going to continue to subsidize the Scandinavian shipping lines. In 1975 the Olsen-Bergen line threatened to pull out of the Tyne and concentrate its services on Hull. That would have meant a lot of unemployment in the port of Tyne, which depended on both passengers and cargo for its livelihood.

Tyne and Wear County Council, along with North
Tyneside Metropolitan District Council, made an agreement with the Olsen-Bergen Line. under which it would subsidize sailings to the Tyne. The main part of the financial package was to promote the North-east in Norway and to make some contribution to port dues.

There was great criticism at the time that ratepayers were subsidizing profitable shipping lines, but this has waned in the light of the fact that tourists from Scandinavia using the line spend up to £14m a year in Britain.

In fact a new contract with Olsen-Bergen is shortly to be announced, while the Danish DFDS line, which calls at Sweden before crossing to the Tyne, has already secured a subsidy agreement with the Tyneside local authorities. Mr Robinson said that the subsidy cost Type and Wear County Council about £1.10 a passenger and was considered the investment the county council had made in years.

The days when thousands of Scandinavian passengers descended upon Tyneside huying up Marks and Spencer" and other stores have Scandinavian passed now that the various Scandinavian governments have imposed import controls on goods bought on Tyneside and with the emergence of the strong pound overseas but the two-way trade is still regarded as well worth nurturing.

Crude buying by affiliates of the multinationals in place of supplies previously managed centrally has been a growing trend in the oil market and from the point of view of many governments has less political risk than direct state-to-state deals favoured by members of the Organization of Petroleium Exporting Countries.

Mr Harry Hooper, chairman of Armstrong Equipment, the motor components group, says in his annual report to shareholders that last year was the most difficult in the company's history and that the "drop in demand" is continuing.

Last year the group was affected by major strikes in the engineering industry and demand "collapsed" in the last quarter of the financial year to the end of June.

Mr Hopper says that the company has taken the right steps to operate successfully under the more difficult conditions prevailing now. He be-lieves that Armstrong Equip-ment will "finish leaner and fitter to take advantage of the turn in demand when it finally

Mr Hooper says that "we have reacted faster than most companies to the new situation and already some of our com-panies which had been badly affected are back into profit. However the cost in human terms and in financial pay-ments for redundancies is high."

Mr P. G. Nixon, chairman of Ferry Pickering Group which is involved in printing, pack-aging and retailing, says in his annual report to shareholders. We are under no illusion that the climate may deteriorate further before an improvement is seen—indeed we believe a positive upture before the end of 1981 could well be optimistic. When they accepted, it was naturally difficult for the underwriters to sell the paper without offering big discounts. Indeed, some offerings were being quoted in pre-market trading at discounts from issue price of between three and four points.

However, prices of seasoned issues rose by one to two points over the week, indicating that dealers and investors were keen on adding to their holdings, or at least covering short positions. "We are seeing a good tail-wind in the market", one trader said. The somewhat confusing mar-ket pattern was reflected in differing views about the out-look for interest rates among market participants. Some dealers and underwriters said the slight improvement in price following the new terms of the International Coffee Agreement

There is still a lot of coffee in Brazil and other places. And, were it not for the new agreement, with its export quotas, the price might have fallen to $1 a pound by January or February from around the present 124 cents a pound, Mr Nestor Osorio, Colombian permanent delegate to the International Coffee Organization (ICO), said, But will it work? Will the new terms be effective in supporting the price in the market?

The really important problem is to arrive As has been indicated on the London Terminal Market, prices should tend to flatten out in at a sound production strategy which prevents excess supplies or shortages. The other side is price stability for consumers? the short term spreading just below £1,100 a tonne within the tight narrow band equivalents of the new agreement.

During this brief period, exporters will adjust their selling to meet the new export quota system of the International Coffee Agreement which became effective on Occober 1

Once the adjustments have been made and the necessary allocations to bona fide customers allowed for, the market will return to a period of guesswork on whether the African and Malagasy Coffee Organization (OAMCAE) will be proper the tion (OAMCAF) will boycott the agreement. Ecuador and Papua New Guinea are also unhappy, OAMCAF, under the leader-ship of the Ivory Coast, has issued a strong protest to the International Coffee Organization against the export quota allocations. This concurs with the opinion of the president of the National Association of Colombian Coffee Exporters, Mr Gilberto Arango Londono, who said that producers might need to look at the commitment to dissolve Pancafé again if the agreement on quotas failed to support coffee prices.

Not surprisingly, Mr Octavio Rainho, president of the Braz-ilian Coffee Institute, agreed readily to the liquidation of Pancafé because it had served its useful purpose. Export quoras might be more effective within the terms of a new ICA to support prices rather than

Busing the issue which is likely to give California to Mr Reagan

From Michael Leapman, Los Angeles, Oct 12 One réason why Ronald Reagan is likely to win the 45 presidential votes at stake in California became plain even in the San Fernando Valley. While the preliminaries were going on, a group in the over-whelmingly white audience began chanting:

No more busing. Vote for The busing of white children into schools in black districts here for more than a year. A "It used to be a solid Demo-cratic county here, but busing has turned it all around."

There is hardly anything Mr Reagan could do to stop busing if he became President. It has been ordered by the courts in response to a Supreme Court decision. Yet the image he projects of resisting government interference in all things appeals to those who resent the authorities telling them where to send their children to school.

Results of a poll published in The New York Times last week showed Mr Reagan leading President Carter in California by 40 per cent to 28 per cent, with 11 per cent favouring Mr. John Anderson, the indepencaudidate. Mr Carter to be writing off this seem: state in favour of more win-nable ones in the Mid-west and he has not appeared here for

Yet California is a politically perverse state in which, partly because it is the home of show business, personalities count for more than policies. Thus it is quite capable of giving its presidential votes to the conservative. Mr Reagan and, at the same, time, reelecting to the Senate a liberal Democrat who is on the of senators whose lefeat is being sought by right-

That is what the poll results aggest will happen this year-et Mr. Alan Cranston, the emocratic whip in the Senate-leaving nothing to chance and running a vigorous, some say of the sponsors of the "Proposition 13" law which reduced state property taxes

Mr Crauston is also trying to distance himself as far as pos-sible from the Carter compaign, endorsing the President but without enthusiasm. Mr. Gann's best hope o is on Mr Reagan's coat-

Mr Gann is an ewlish man of 68, grey-haired with spectacles, resembling Sir John Betjeman. He has twice been declared bankruot, as Mr Crauston does not tire of pointing out. Senator Cranston, a Tean and earnest former athlete, is seek ing his third term at the age o 67. Even if he can hold on the combination of Mr Reagan and the busing issue could sweet away other Democratic incum bents in California, in particular Mr James Corinan, who has spent 14 years in Congress.

At the weekend rally, on a football field about 20 miles porth-west of Los Angeles, Mr Reagan disappointed his sup-porters by not mentioning the busing issue Secure in the affections of his conservative followers, he knows that to win the election he has to capture

Mr. Reagan, made no refer ence to an issue on which he had to eat his words earlier last week, when he said he toxic smog has enveloped the coast for the last two weeks. At this stage in the cam-paign the trail for Mr Reagan and hardly be happier. Though there could still be an ladian or two lurking behind the sagebrush, the cowboy hero, as I fecall, always used to prevail in the end. Growing up, page 10

Turkish right-wing leaders to be tried

From Sinan Fisek Ankara, Oct 12

The leaders and some members of two right-wing parties, the Nationalist Action Party and the National Salvation Party and the National Salvation Party, will be tried by military courts on charges of having committed crimes against the Turkish state, it was officially announced in Ankara.

Mr Alpaslam Turkes, a retired colonel, aged 63, chairman of the neo-Nazi Nationalist Action Party, could be sentenced to death according to Article 149 of the Turkish Penal Gode, for having "led" a since the coup of September 12. Gode, for having "led" a movement aimed at "arming the people against each other the people against each other to commit mass murder."

Together with Mr Turkes, the leading figure of the Turkish far right who was first detained for pro-Nazi activities in 1944, 16 deputies and 10 other members of the NAP will be put on trial before a military tribunal in Ankara. Warrants have been issued for the arrests of 36 other members of the NAP, or of its sister organthe NAP, or of its sister organization, the Idealist youth associations which are believed to have served as fronts for armed right-wing terrorist groups.

Other than the 16 MPs from Mr Turkes' party, few perliamentarians were arrested. Among them were three from the Republican Party. Two of them were accused of having threatened civil segments with threatened civil servants with firearms while they were in office, and thus enjoyed parliamentary immunity.

Observers here noted the care shown by the military rulers to observe legal forms; all persons detained after the of September 12 having been either freed or arrested by courts before the end of the 30-day detention period im-posed shortly after the take-

Chilean opposition seeks to have plebiscite annulled

From Florencia Varas Santiago, Oct 12

A month after the referendum that gave what is officially regarded as approval for at least another eight years' rule by President Augusto Pinochet, Chilean opposition groups, headed by the Christian Democrats, have presented a docu-ment declaring the plebiscite invalid.

One of the principal criticisms was that people were required to vote on a proposal for which no alternative was offered. This allowed the Government to say that rejection of the proposal would constitute a return to the "chaos" that reigned before the coup of September 11, 1973, without specifying the extent of the undefined chaos.

The Government responded by denying all the accusations and declaring that they lacked legal and moral validity. They were aimed at ignoring "the clear expression of popular will," an official statement said. Critics of the Government include General Gustavo Leigh, a former junta member and Air

Delhi, Oct 12. President Babrak Karmal of Afghanistan today starts his first visit to Moscow since he left hurriedly last December to be installed by the Soviet Union in the presidential palace in Kabul. His presence in Moscow raises important questions about the future of the Soviet occupation, and of Mr Karmal.

The Russians always hoped that he would broaden his small and unpopular political base, isolate the hostile and dis-contented and establish a popular regime which would vindicate their military action.

That hope has been dashed.

The Russians may now feel they have been misled by a man who apparently convinced them he could eliminate or mend rivalries and bring the bulk of the people behind him.

The Karmal regime, weak and detested, is held up only by a framework of Russian arms and administration. Mr.

Karmal, once known as a champion of people's causes, champion of people's causes, is a parish in his own land. He keeps to his palace, presiding over a crumbling economy, a ramshackle and untrustworthy army, a dispirited civil zervice, a fleeing middle class and a truculent populace.

From Trevor Fishlock

Zaldivar, the Christian Democratic Party president, who has insisted that there could not be a valid plebiscite Zaldivar, a former Minister of the Economy and Finance under President Eduardo Frei, said the regime could not derive its legitimacy from the act.

The opposition allegations, which have been presented to the National Scrutiny Group, say the plebiscite involved three separate issues: A new con-stitution, a transitional government ranging from nine to 16 years; and the naming of General Pinochet as President of the Republic for eight years. Yet, though three questions were involved, only one Yes or

No response was allowed.

The Christian Democrats also say that at the time of the voting the country was in a government-declared state of emergency, with restrictions on the individual's freedom of speech and association. They the individual's freedom of speech and association. They criticized the absence of a verifiable list of registered voters.

But it is unlikely that the Russians will arrange a diplo-matic illness for him soon. That would be too plain an admission that they had picked the wrong gauleiter and that Afghanistan is not the calm province they would like it to be.

In any case, Afghan politics him, although such names as Salih Muhammad Ziri, secretary of the Central Council of Hilary Finch Two visions of Paradise and the spiritual journey towards it, no less, were offered at Simon Rattle's first London concert as principal conductor of the CBSO.

Szymanowski, naively devo-tional, poised in meditation, as tional, poised in meditation, as it were, ourside time in his Stabat. Matter, and Matter, striving through time, through recollection and struggle to resurrection and affirmation in his Second Symphony provided a coupling as imaginative and rewarding as the performance itself in the two halves of Friday's concert.

Friday's concert.
Friday's concert.
From the opening Stabat Mater, with Alison Hargan as a vulnerably desolate, purevoiced soprano soloist, Simon Rattle showed himself to be master of the muance, balancing choir, vocal and orchestral soloists and full orchestra, with me precision, revealing to the full the beauty of the archaic harmonic progressions, the shammeting textures of Szyman-owski's orchestration. Had the choir's vowels and consonants been harder they would have coloured and underscored the solo writing that much more effectively, while doing nothing to compromise the beauty and subilety of tone at which they aimed and indeed, achieved. Such assiduous attention to detail augured well for the Mahler; and expectations were fulfilled as each line of instru-mental sound was clearly drawn out, each split second of sound hallowed in the approach to the first movement funeral march. If the third movement's sense of second movement Ländler, its tempo wonderfully poised, had a rare sheen, a unity and beauty of string tone too seldom beard in the Festival Hall acoustic.

After a deeply feit "Urlicht" from Alfreda Hodgson, the last movement began with a tautly controlled frenzy of sound and controlled frenzy of so fury signifying almost too much too soon. The first brass chorale, for instance, could have been quieter, the isolated trumpets before the Maestoso much less obtrusive, the ending before the distant trumpet calls far slower—all to enable the final climat to be as breath-served to be.

If the dynamic levels of the all male chorus entries were not as "perfectly calculated as the thoroughly successful first "Aufecsteh'n", soloists, choir and orchestra all contributed valiantly to Mr Rattle's swift and eager build-up of that al-most, unhearable tension which Mahler himself wondered how he ever came to create.

The curmudgeonly side of Pasquale the final blessing on the lovers, "State felice", comes as an inevitability rather than an improbable volte face. At the end of the duet with Malatesta, "Cheti, cheti", two chairs are lieben engelein a work in-fluenced by the drama of Italian monody (Frescobaldi left on stage safe in the know-Italian monody (Frescobaldi was Tunder's teacher), preceded one of two cantatas by Andreas Hammerschmidt. Both Jesu meine Freude and Schmücket dos fest showed this composer's ability, matched by performers, to bring to sacred texts an almost mischievous light touch. Inevitably, though it was the three giant figures of Schütz, Bustehude and Telemann who left the deepest marks. Of ledge that the audience will demand an encore, which indeed they do. Buxtehude's Alles was ihr tut. like the Hammerschmidt, was another bright piece, its springing rhythms, simple har-monies and eloquent violin decorations (from John Holloway and Roy Goodman) made a joyous end to the evening.

Most fastinating of all, however, was Telemann's Contact ever, was Telemann's Cantata on the 117th Psalm. In spite of his machine-like fluency. English National Opera North have started their third season at home in Leeds, with three new productions borrowed from their colleagues of Welsh National Opera. Other producers and stage designers may sense, with anxiety, the omens of a closed shop whereby there will be no opportunity to con-

the same opera, because the chosen interpretation will simply be passed round our several companies until it That hasn't happened yet: if it does—in these days of scant public subsidy for the arts, production-swapping seems a production-swapping seems a sensible way to share costs, and se reduce expenditure—there will always be plenty of other operas awaiting admission to the pool. When a particular production is as fine as David Pountney's staging of Janacek's Jenufa (made jointly for WNO and Scottish Opera, fine chosen in Caroliff fine verse. first shown in Cardiff five years ago), it seems sensible that ENON should borrow it, rather than keep a marvellous operation out of its own repertory, or spend a mort of money on a new production which may be less admirable, and less attractive to audiences. Here, at any rate, is that production of Jenufa with the large gyrating millwheel at the start, and the open-plan skeleton depiction of Kostelnicka's cottage (a real inspiration by Maria Björnson, I now see, though we miss the profuse trappings of religion on what should be the walls). The settings look well on the stage of the Grand The-aire, though the ambitious lighting-plot had not entirely settled down by Friday (ENON'S third performance of the piece).

The production looks dif-erent because the cast is ENON'S own. Lorna Haywood's Jenofa is familiar in London (she has sung it in Prague, too), here quite unglamorous, determinedly ordinary in ap-pearance, ably and intelligently sung, remarkable only for her sung, remarkable only for her consistent sweetness of character, forgiving grateful naturally kind, which shines through every phrase and gesture. Margaret Kingsley's Kostelnicka asserts authority and remorse, with some thrilling and some painfully squally singing, without the amazing menetration of

There are numerous subsi-diary characters in Jenuja, all strongly characterized by Pountney, and strongly taken in Leeds. Jean Allister's still in Leeds. Jean Allister's still vigorous Grandma (a Pouniney feature always), was typical, likewise John Tranter's scif-conscious Mayor, and Bente Marcussen's sparkling Karolka, particularly Rilary Jackson as the self-assertive, neurotic Mrs Mayor.

The conductor, David Lloyd-Jones, very notably made the most of Janacek's orchestral music, often when one's attention may expect to dwell on the singers, as in Kostelnicka's first solo in the third act. He was Margaret Kingsley's Kostelnicka solo in the third act. He was tradition but a presentable hus solo in the third act. He was tradition but a presentable hus with some thrilling and some painfully squally singing, without the amazing penetration of the role by her predecessor in Wales and Scotland: the daemon was in abeyance.

Nixon

A Study in Extremes of For-By Lord Longford

(Weidenfeld & Nicolson, £8.95) The moral dilemmas of great power are one of the most fascinating subjects in the study of history. There is no doubt that many people who are quite virtuous in their private character accept the necessities of power and allow them to override private conscience. Every English reign from Edward IV to Queen Elizabeth saw the killing of a close relation of the Monarch for reasons of state. Henry VIII killed with enthusiasm: his father, Henry VII, was reluctant to have the dim-witted Warwick murdered and felt very guilty after the event; his daughter, Queen Elizabeth, was reluctant to sanction the execution of the only too quick-wirted Mary Queen of Scots, and felt deep grief after the event. But in what they saw as the political necessity of the time, each authorized the killing.

It is the way in which he dealt with the moral dilemma of power that makes the Presidency of Richard Nixon particularly fascinating. That, and the way that American opinion reacted to his failings. It is almost certain that Nixon had no prior browledge of the had no prior knowledge of the grotesquely incompetent Watergate burglary himself, but it is completely clear that he was responsible for the attempted cover-up. As President Nixon wrote, I was looking for a way to deal with Watergate that would minimise the damage to me and my friends and my campaign, while giving the least advantage to my political opposition. There is no doubt that this was wrong. It involved the President in interfering with the course of justice and in lying to the American people. Once that had been discovered, it did in fact become politically inevitable that he should resign. This was a matter for regret, as his Presidency was one of important achievements, par-ticularly in international affairs, achievements which included the ending of the Vietnam war and the opening of the American relationship with China. His Presidency also saw an improvement in the relationship between the United States and the Soviet Union. The world is a safer place because of President Nixon's policies. I wonder how many men of a situation in which a subordinate had committed a relatively minor act of criminal following. many would, for moral reasons, rave done other than try to limit the political damage? Some men of power would certainly have been snrewder than Nixon was in seeing that a cover-up could not work and would have done a surgical operation earlier and more ruthlessly. I helieve that such different men as President de Gaulle, Mr Edward Heath or President Eisenhower would have done that. Yet I suspect that most politicions, confronted with such a scandal in the middle of an election campaign, would have wanted to put the lid on it and keep it there, which is exactly what Nixon did. Of course, it is true that Nixon had inherited an imperial concept of the Presidency, which gave the Presidency awesome powers, even when they were not wrongly used. That makes the abuse of power more disturb-ing. But he did not invent those powers and was probably a shade less imperial in his view of the Presidency than his two predecessors, Kennedy and Johnson. Nor was he the first to abuse them.

The comparison between Nixon and Johnson is a strange one. Johnson escalated the Vietnam war which was a dis-aster for America and was fought in a terrible way. Nixon ended it. Johnson was a more ruthless political manipulator than Nixon and therefore more dangerous to the institutional proprieties of the United States. Johnson lied about issues of war and peace to the Senate. Nixon lied about a matter of scandal. Johnson is seen as a respectable President in the American historic tradition and Nixon is a children's bogey man. Then again, there is Harry S. Truman, still a hero to the Democrats, who was responsible for the nuclear bombing of Hiroshima, which may have been justified by necessity, and of Nagasaki, which certainly was not. There is no doubt that in the history of American public opinion Watergate weighs more heavily than

why it should.

Lord Longford's biographical essay on Nixon attempts a re-assessment. President Nixon's career is so highly charged with emotion that even to attempt a reassessment will no doubt being down on Lord Longford angry critics-not for the first time—but it is an honest and useful book and I found its reappraisal of the balance of Nixon's career convincing. President Nixon is a power would bave seen the tragic figure, of a not un-moral issue of Watergate in a different way? Confronted with who betrayed himself under in the past seven or eight years: can any theatre have been more loyal to the early Ibsen than the Oxford Playhouse? This new production, freely adapted by Adrian Mitchell from an expert translation by Karin Bamborough and likeably set to music by the rock composer Nick Bicat, com-bines with the National Theatre's brilliant Brand of a couple of years ago to help define the on the face of things unlikely appeal of these strange poetic dramas.

It has a lot to do with their sheer scale and audacity—the ferociously busy imagination of the young Ibsen in the mid 1860s, working on the compli-cated experiences of his up-bringing and on the clash beprovincial Norwegian puritanism and the expansive romantic world he found in his wide reading and travels. And the only way to do these plays is with comparable audacity— the thilling rigours of the Geoffrey Hill/Inga-Stina Ewbank your way up a theatrical ice-cap, or now the generous, irre-verent exuberance of this partly up-dated, partly fantasticated but in spirit very faithful ver-sion of Peer Gynt.

tility of the work, with its in some ways crude and yet imagihatively complex plot about being good versus having a good time, and about the interior and exterior worlds, is brought out through Mitchell's and Bicar's readiness (and the readiness of the director, Gordon McDougall, and the designer, Nadine Baylist to seize their chances : nowhere better dian in the big Trolls scene—a comic surroal nightmare-or the vividly staged shipwreck. Peer is played by Ian Mc-Diarmid, an actor who could turn Osric into the Elephant Man if he was asked to. Given Peer's obsessive role-playing, it's inevitably one of the biggest -if sometimes the most inchn-ste-performances seen on this stage for some time: though it by no means outclasses the strong supporting cast. Peter Jonfield is a versatile Super Troll, his begging song near the end, with its hilariously pert, xylophone-accompanied chorus "Cooking Sherry", one of the funniest of some very funny numbers. And Laura Darenport manages to make Solvein-a character who easily heats Desdemona to the Undereloped Female Lead prize-remarkably unemetic. There are things wrong with the production, as there are with the plant but the things that are right with it are worth travelling some way to see.

Gloria Covent Garden

Judith Cruickshank A repeat of Thursday's triple bill brought a change of cast in the leading male role in Kenneth MacMillan's Gloria on Saturday when David Wall took over the part created by Wayno Eagling. The two men are very different physical types: Eag-ling tall, loose-limbed and rather unclassical in style and I suspect temperament, and Wall more forceful and compact and very definitely a premier danseur.

It is to the credit of both dancer and choreographer that the change succeeded so well. Wall dominates the action to a greater extent than Eagling and he brings more bitterness and anger to his interpretation. He phrases his dancing more classically, but this bas the virtue of sportighting MacMillan's inventive and original movement still more clearly.

One becomes more aware of details, the finger pointed accusingly at the audience and the long final stare before the stunning backwards leap into the grave.

the other leading male role. Hosking's beautiful and elegiac pas de deux with lenniler Penny is one of the highlights of the ballet. And all the more moving because of the restraint with which MacMillan has hinted at emotions instead of letting his dancers wallow fullbloodedly. Musically, I still tind this rork a puzzle. Perhaps Mac-Millan has chosen to set this lament for the loss of an entire generation to a hymn of praise to the glory of God as a deliberate irony. But that still does not explain the broad smile on Wendy Ellis's face ! The evening opened with a rather low-key performance of Ashton's Enigma Variations. Most of the original cast have been replaced, but Derek Rencher's fine portrait of Elgar remains as the beystone of the work. He seems to have resisted any temptation to broaden or embellish his role and some of the newer mem-bers of the cast would do well to follow his example.

Stephen Bengley is settling more comfortably into the central part in Rharsedy, but with Baryshuikov gone, the ballet becomes almost entirely Wall's command and maturity the property of the ladies provide a fine contrast with the cast—and what long Julian Hosking's more gentle ladies they are, every one. the property of the ladies in the cast—and what lovely

Lyle faces Norman in matchplay final with a special flavour

By John Hennessy Sandy Lyle, who faces Greg Norman, of Australia, in the final of the world matchplay tourna-ment sponsored by Suntory, at Wentworth today, set the seeme during an interview after yesterday's semi-finals. "He's going to be after my guts," he said. The final, indeed, carries a special flavour as a result of events elsewhere—but, first things first.

Lyle, the first Briton to reach the final since the inaugural event 16 years ago, and Norman had comfortable victories in yesterday's semi-finals, heating respecday's semi-tinals, nealing respec-tively Peter Jacobsen, of the United States, and Bernard Gal-lacher, the other Scot who sur-vived the early rounds, by the same handsome margin, six and same handsome margin, six and five.

The semi-final round had heen postponed from Saturday because of the waterlogged state of the course. The one-sided nature of the two matches added to the general atmosphere of anti-climax and as sarily as half past three the gum borted spectators were straggling their way back from distant parts of the course. Gallacher, bonny fighter though he undoubtedly is, seemed outgunned from the start and, if Jacobsen seemed more of a match for Lyle, he could rarely come to terms with his putter. He took four on one green and three from only five fect on another. This is no recipe for facing Lyle in his present form, a man good enough to have beaten George Burns, of the United States, by six and five and Isao Aoki, winner two years ago, by five and four six and rive and Isao Aoki, winner two years ago, by five and four in earlier rounds.

On the first hole in the moraing, Norman struck fear into the hearts of Scottish supporters with nearts in socials and a dazzling three iron from a lie left of the fairway. He hit the pin and the ball nestled no more than nine inches from the hole. From a distance of about 200 yards he struck the hall with an accur-he struck the ball with superb accuracy.

And yet the same man, such is the perverse nature of a game that alternately thrills and frustrates, needed three blows from his putter to persuade the ball home from 10 yards at the next. The disparity in length between the two men was such that it was here, on and around the greens, the two men was such that it was here, on and around the greets, that Gallacher's main hove of salvation lay. Again Norman took four at the next short hole, the fifth, and Gallacher was again back to all square, having had to concede the fourth.

To the match see-sawed for a time, but when Norman found his touch he pulled steadily away. He funched four up and won the first time at the long lifth where he wedged imo holes afterwards. He again had an eagle at the first, so awry with his four fron this time that he had to hole from all of six feet, and took his revenge at the second with a 15-foot putt for a two. He reached the turn in 33, to be five under par for 27 holes. Lyle achieved a huge psychological advantage over Jacobsen, by winning four of the first six holes, Jacobsen's miseries began with the first hole, if you can attribute such a reaction to so amiable a young man. He needed a three-foot putt to match Lyle's birdie four, but it eluded him, as so many others were to do Jacobsen was bunkered at the

This match was still not quite the foregone conclusion that now characterized the one in from Jacobsen is a fine striker of the ball, from a classic swing, and if he could only get his putter going, or if Lyle should lose his rhythm, there was still the possibility of a transformation. But neither happened. Lyle, who has "lots of raw talent for a man of 22" according to his opponent, held his game serenely rogether and Jacobsen could conjure no magic from his putter. This match was still not quite magic from his putter.

Norman's interest in Lyle's intestines derives from their varying fortunes in last week's tournament at St Pierre. By one stroke Lyle climbed over the Australian to end a season at the head of the European order of merit, a position that opened a number of locative doors.

In today's third place play off (10.0), Gallacher and Jacobsen will meet over 18 holes.

For the opposition to provide the best midfield player at Anfield is a remarkable feat. But here Liverpool's energy source, Souness, McDermott, Kennedy and Lee, were matched at their own business. In the end they were made to appear inaccurate and a little slow; even Bob Paisley, the Liverpool manager, whose hurrah for the opposition rarely survives the first hip-hip, conceded that much to Ipswich.

With Brazil missing, Ipswich required Gates to play with Mariner in a two-man attack, thus reinforcing midfield with an extra man, McCail. Less than intoxicating Welsh win over wine that travelled badly Wales B 12 ent at Neath on The entertainment at Neath on Standay was every bit as bleak and unrewarding as a score of four penalty goals to nothing suggests. Pearce, the Bridgend stand-off half, was not extended to find the target twice in each half, and France, after a run of three victories, now lead 7—5 in a series in which the away side hape succeeded only once. The French won at Aberavon two years ago.

French won at Aberavon two years ago.

If the result, the Welsh commitment and the performance of Gereth Williams at No 8 were gratifying for the crowd, they must have felt that their ream had nothing much to beat. This looked a most indifferent French vintage, travelling badly. It lacked flair and verve, wit and bits.

One expected them to do better with a strongish wind at their backs in the second period, but Mathias; a long-legged stand-off with a helty boot, who had seen three long-range penalty shots blown back before the interval, soon missed a sitter and French roubles multiplied. The Welsh scriminage now was the more solid one after early unease, and French Lineout ball was a continuing embarassment for a scrum hall and captain enduring an unhappy, indecisive afternoon. His gauche, atypical partner had a worse one. Passes were taken standing still, Distribution close in was inaccurate, intentions of the midfield looked obvious, the Welsh knocked them over with relish and every top move from a penalty was bouched. In a contest sponsored by the Post Office, French lines looked hopelessly crossed, and there was even an occasion, after a defensive touchdown by their opponents, when one of their players enthusiastically tackled the Welsh captain ten metres inside his 22 and he was darting back for the drop-out. This, of course, had to precede one of the more than 40 penalties awarded by the Englishman, Mr High, whose sostemuto performance on the whistle did not assist the momentum of the game. A referee's lot is rarely a happy one when he sees the laws persistently infringed. Garetti Williams, the Bridgend flanker and a replacement Lion in South Africa, now playing at No 8, won a great deal of ball at the tail of the lineout by some clean two-banded catching and, first half by throwing long, But clearly he is knocking firmly on the door for a first senior cap, somewhere at loose forward, against New Zeoland.

Another Welshman to make a good mark was Welsh, the Ponty-pried full back, who recovered from an early knock-on under his posts (the scrummage position was thrown to the winds by France) to kick quite beautifully into the wind in the second half. There are those who say that if J. P. R. had been in South Africa last summer, the Lions would have won the series. There was, for instance, Ian Hall, their reserve stand-off. He kicked three penalities, a dropped goal and a conversion, and looked goal and a conversion, and looked confident, astute and elusive into the bargain. Cook, another reserve, served him faithfully. Ferwick, too, was confident and astute, but what else would you expect of a captain of Wales? For once, he kicked no goals. He did not need too, with Hall on target. But he did attempt a 60-metre penalty, and nearly sur-

With nothing to lose but the match, the Welsh gave the ball plenty of air. Their forwards scrimmaged and rucked manfully, George tried all he knew, which is a good deal. Owen, like Hall, hinted broadly at even better things, and nobody shirked a tackle. If George had had better luck with his place kicking, Bridgend's first defeat in 19 matches might have been in the offing. Their winning sequence was already the longest in senior Welsh rugby.

The match was just as dramatic and exciting as the score suggests but, overall, it was a reminder of the old Yorkshire saving that "a good big un will always beat a good little un". Robinson did have a run of 12 Robinson had to play too many good shots under too much pressure. This was partly because of the basic quality of Briar's squash, partly because of his extraordi-

Barrington has been Britain's most highly ranked player since 1965 but in recent years has seldom put that reputation at risk, partly because of the now ended segregation between professionals and amateurs. He is in his 40th year, but anyone who knows the man's character must assume that his currently disputed status as Britain's number one will not be conceded by default—that Barring-ton will "front up" to this possibly ultimate challenge as he has to so many more. The national ranks were confounded in the first round at Walton Hall when the nimble Steve Bateman, making one of his rare public appearances without his trendy trilby, beat Ashley Naylor. Bateman's aggressive and well-designed squash was not the ideal form of convalence for ideal form of convalescence for an opponent with an ailing back. Recitation the last word in courage

The French were routed at Loughamp this afternoon where colts trained in England and Ireland took the first two places in France's most important two-year-old event, the group one Grand Criterium. At the end of a truly run mile, the Guy Harwood-trained Recitation was a short head in front of Critique, who had been sent from Ireland by Vincent O'Brien. The chances are that we shall not see Gonzales race again in Europe, for his future is now likely to take him to the United States. Robert Sangster, his owner, nominated the new million dollar race at Arlington in Angust as the one he will be aimed at.

Another group winner for Vincent O'Brien and Mr Sangster was Fuclid, who, ably handled by George McGrath, got the better of a prolonged duel with Carroll's riouin, Lord Never, in the Berestord Stakes.

"It was a good life. I have never asked for anything more, then or now."—Ronald Reagan. on growing up in Dixon! Illinois. In August 1927, Just about everyone in town turned out to watch Charles Lindbergh, flying his famous plane, the Spirit of St Louis, circle the "wire. works mand dip a wing as if to say hello, before continuing on Dison lost to Mendota, 24 to 0. A week later, Dixon lost to its bared rival, Sterling, 25 to 0. The Dixon paper said the boys from Sterling "romped" almost at will making long gains "through the Dixon line". Thereafter, the Evening Telegraph drew something of a veil over the increasingly inept exploits of the home team, failing to report the outcome of the last two or three games. But Mr Reagan, 69 now and running better against Jimmy Carter and John Anderson than he ever did against those tough kids from Sterling High, remembers. This, he says, is where his "roots" are. This is:

reporter reading copies of the old newspapers, talking to the handful of old friends who remain and visiting the old haunts, is struck, first of all, by the thought that this happened a long time ago. That summer of 1927, President Coolidge visited Havana and was wildly cheered by enthusiastic Cabans. Hamburger cost 18 cents a pound at the Buehler Bros. meat marker And the new

For seven years, Mr Reagan worked as a lifeguard at Lowell Park, a summer resort on the Rock River three miles north of town. Every morning that summer, he drove an old Dodge truck out to the park loaded with ice, for the soda-pop barrels. Then he began his life-guarding; he says he reacued 77 people over those seven sum-mers. And he was in love. His girl, Margaret "Mugs " Cleaver, was the preacher's daughter and the smartest kid at Dixon

It sounds idýllic. Mr Reagan remembers it that way. So do then," says Dr W. L. Stitzel, who was a class behind Mr Reagan at school and who still Reagan at school and who still practises medicine in Dixon.

But how? Of course that is far easier said than done. But I believe there are at least six clear principles by which this goal needs to be realized, and without which no society could be called genuinely socialist. They also offer the only serious alternative to the Thatcherite monetarist slump and in the now discredited establishment attitude that presided over our

The first of these is production for social use. Under social ism, production is determined by the social needs of the community, not by what happens to offer prospects of profitability at any given point of time. This is not of course to suggest that the product of a socialist economy will not overlap quite closely in many respects with that of a capitalist economy, but only that the balance of emphases will be different—for example, on improved housing rather than office property, on domestic manufacture rather than imports, or on better health and

But John Crabtree, returned with the help of a walker, says young Reagan came pretty close to being a "goody-goody".

The police chief came along in his Model T and asked Dutch what he was doing.

just who do you think you are?"
said Dutch. And the chief took him in, and he was fined a buck. In the haze of nostalgia, the problems are overlooked. But they must have been real enough. One of them was Mr Reagan's father, known to everyone in town as "Jack".

Mr Crabtree puts the case politely when he notes that Jack Reagan had "a great thirst".

The bout between Billy Kelly When Mr Little lifted Hill's of Londonderry, British feather hand in victory at the end of weight champion, and Charlie the fifteenth, my Irish friend Hill of Glasgow, was good as gasped: "By God, you're title fights go.

The King's Hall, Belfast, was a cockpit of hell that February night in 1956. It made the recent Wembley affair look like a little local difficulty.

Normally all Mr George Con-nell, the promoter, had to do to get an 18,000 sell-out was to pit a good Roman Catholic boy against a good Protestant

But that night Mr Counell had done what politicians still have failed to achieve. There was a United Ireland behind their darling boy Kelly against the challenger, Scotland's new Bonnie Prince Charlie.

I had seen plenty of excitement there before, particularly when Terry Allen of London, fought Rinty Monaghan of Belfast, the world flyweight champion, to a draw in September, 1949.

That was a bad night for Terry's barrow boy fans. When-ever a few fisticuffs flew it was always the police night sticks which seemed to prefer their heads to their rivals. The draw neads to their rivals. The draw meant that Monaghan kept his title, and the peace. He kept those Irish eyes smiling with a song from the ring in his charm-

To stoke up their fervour in Irish fashion the fans used to drink all day in bars like Kelly's Cellar. By the time the first bell went for the main event they were white-faced with passion which needed only one contro-versial spark to explode.

More so that night. It was a big fight. They roused thunder-ously when Kelly had Hill down for a count of two in the second round, and in the twelfth, when Hill's left eye closed from n mighty right cross.

Hill, rubber-legged and glassy-eyed, somehow fought back. At the end of the thirteenth round a Belfast colleague asked me how I had scored it so

Mr Little ducked through the ropes, put on his overcoat, which had been lying at the ringside and vanished. There was a second's silence and then a slow rumble, like the warning of a thunderstorm at high noon

Suddenly it broke. Chairs and bottles rained into the ring. Furious fans leapt into it, yel-ling for Mr Little's blood. My Irish pal said: "They'll kill him if they find him". In their shock they had not seen Mr Little walk upstairs to the promoter's room at the back of the hall and watch the shenanigans from a window.

A bottle whizzed past my right ear and skidded across the bald head of a Dublin colleague phoning his office. Blood trickled from a gash. He dabbed it with a handkerchief and said: "Yes, it's blood", and went on phoning. The referee for the next contest was knocked out by a fly-ing bottle. Mr James Fallon, the master of ceremonies, was knocked down four times in the ring by furious fans. A press photographer was knocked out. Mr Andrew Smyth, British Boxing Board of Control steward in charge of the bout, who had emerged unscarred from a career of amateur box from a career of amateur boxing and years of professional

Why the Gulf war finds us baffled

The war between Iran and Iraq could have one good effect. It could make those in the West concerned with foreign and defence policies begin to think, not merely about the villar ability of western interests and the impotence of western policy in the face of acute region in the globe but also about our intellectual and political bankruptcy in devising an

We do not know what to do or even what to think, who do we want to win, how do we promote peace and on what terms, does Russia benefit from the success of Soviet arms in Irani hands and the enfectionent of Iran or does the West benefit from the chastisement of Iran's virulently ann-western revolution by a possible new ally which is already supported by Saudi Arabia and Jordan whose friendship we need, and which is opposed by Syria whose enmity we suffer?

We find outselves thus per-plexed because we have no strategy for the region, and we have no strategy for the region because we have no adequate framework for think-ing about how to integrate the necessary management of East-West global balance with the handling of regional and local realities on which the global-realities on which the global-balance frequently depends.

Indeed, the economist cometo-foreign-policy is afflicted by an acute sense of deja vii. In foreign policy, it seems, as in economic policy each successive failure of policy is greeted with squeals of relief and delight by the architects of the previously failed policy rather than by any attempt to examine the possible detects of the premises common to both. If the ravages of monetarism are now making it pseudo-

In 1959 the party won 35.3 per cent of the vote but 20 years later, in 1979, the figure dropped to 28.8 per cent. Almost half the trade union electorate voted for Mrs Thatcher. All the evidence, then, suggests that Labour is in lose any votes to the left, it does lose them massively to the centre and fight.

At the precise point when abour is torn by incompatible policy differences and cannot even identify a new leader, another great Socialist party is demonstrating a very different fortune. For the German Social Democratic party, the SPD, has just won a national election tandem leadership of Schmidt and Brandt has proved one of its greatest electoral assets. During the 1970s the SPD won two elections and increased in membership. Labour suffered two appalling defeats and actually narrowed its appeal.

One is therefore entitled to ask whether there are any les-sons which the Labour Party might learn from the SPD. It is obviously simplistic to imagine that Labour could copy the SPD's policies lock, stock and barrel. Yet there are grounds for arguing that by following the example of German Social Democracy in a number of key areas, the British Labour Party could do itself and its true supporters, a great deal of good.

There are, of course, impor-

In Las Vegas a couple of weeks ago, for what was spuriously billed as a boxing march, I was standing at the bar of the Alad-din Hotel and casino with a group of chiefly British repor-ters. We were talking about the

You must know it. It would scarcely be an exaggeration to say that every foreign reporter visiting the dreadful place for the first time writes it. Phrases like "Tawdry glitter" and "the expressionless zombies at the rows of endlessly whirring slot machines" trip all too gaily off our typewriters.

We come, we look, we even ioin in. Then we issue our inevitable moral judgment that the world would be a cleaner and better place if Las Vegas were not part of it. It makes us feel much better. I cannot now recall precisely when I wrote the Basic Las Vegas Story myself, but it certainly feels as if I have.

Anyway, everybody at the bar that evening was being soiffy about that particular journalistic cliche. One of us told how, after he had made his first grand tour in search of the real America, he proudly took his clutch of articles back to his London office with him. An editor of infinite wisdom skipped through them, clucking approval, until he came to the Las Vegas one. This he with-drew from the pile and slipped it elegantly on to the legendary

Both organized and dis-organized crime flourish in Las Vegas. Bank robbery is so frequent that the police give out tips on the radio about what to do if you are a bank employee and it happens to you. Organized crime stoops to anything as vulgar as robbing banks. Its influence in the actual running of the spectacular robbery—is cancerous. Though the authorities remove bits of it surgically from time to time, a trace always remains to grow large again.
